Georgia RAILROADS

With over 4,600 miles of active rail lines, Georgia has the largest rail network in the Southeast. The railroad system in Georgia includes 28 freight railroads, including two Class I railroads – Norfolk Southern and CSX, as well as the largest intermodal facility on the East Coast. Georgia's location provides direct rail access to the Mid-Atlantic, Northeast and Midwest regions of the United States. Amtrak operates four long distance passenger trains in Georgia: the Crescent, operating between New York and New Orleans; the Silver Meteor and the Silver Star, operating between New York and Miami; and the Palmetto, operating between New York and Savannah. There are five Amtrak stations in Georgia: Atlanta, Toccoa, Savannah, Gainesville, and Jesup.

The Georgia Department of Transportation (GDOT) owns 490 miles of shortline rail, which are leased to private shortline rail operators for the purpose of preserving and enhancing the State's rail transportation system for future development of freight and passenger service. GDOT's Intermodal Division conducts planning and project development for freight, passenger, and commuter rail operations within the state, and the development of the State Rail Plan, which identifies long-range freight and passenger needs. The Intermodal Division also provides safety and security oversight for rail transit in the state. For more information, visit http://www.dot.ga.gov/IS/Rail.
